EURALEX Congress 2004

Registration is now open for the 11th EURALEX International Congress which is to be held in Lorient, France, from the 6th to 10th July 2004. Invited speakers include Pierre Corbin, Tony Cowie, Christine Jacquet-Pfau and John Sinclair.

Up-to-date information on registration, the programme, social events, and accommodation is to be found on the Congress Website: <http://www.univ-ubs.fr/euralex2004>.

Registration and accommodation have been separated. Registration forms and fees must be sent to the university at the address given. Secure online payment will be possible as from the beginning of March. Accommodation, other than Youth Hostels, can be booked directly through the Tourist Office of Lorient. Those who wish to stay longer or seek family accommodation will find that the Tourist Office also has a range of cottages available. Given the popularity of the Breton coast in summer it is preferable to book early, even if block bookings have been made by the Tourist Office. The Youth Hostel can be found at: <http://www.fuaj.org/aj/lorient>.

Preferential fares have been negotiated with Air France and French Railways, SNCF. Details can be found on the website and will be sent to all those who have registered or pre-registered. Lorient is easy of access by road, rail or plane. Flights usually require a change of plane in Paris or Lyon, the latter being the easiest option. More information can be found on the website.

We look forward to welcoming you to Lorient. If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact us at: elx2004@univ-ubs.fr.

Third Lexicom International Workshop : Lexicom 2003

'Learning how to' rather than 'learning about' is the now well-tried approach of the annual Lexicom Workshop in Lexicography and Lexical Computing. This year's workshop was held in Brighton, England, from July 13-18, 2003.

We kept the group smaller this year, and this gave the week a “tutorial” flavour. Everyone had their own computer, and worked either individually or with a partner during a week of intensive training on the making of corpus-based dictionaries and the software that supports this activity.

Participants

As in previous years, those attending the 2003 workshop came from many different backgrounds: publishing houses (lexicographers and editors), universities (linguists, computational linguists, computer scientists, and graduate students), software houses (software engineers and computational linguists) and research institutions. The bursary generously offered by the European Association for Computational Linguistics was awarded to Nina Tudjman Vukovic from Croatia.

Programme

Each seminar introduced and discussed a key topic, which was then further explored in practical exercises at the computer. As well as the basics of practical lexicography, the programme covered corpus design and annotation, the extraction of information from corpus data to build a dictionary entry, a brief look at various types of dictionary databases, and an introduction to frame semantics as a practical approach to corpus analysis. Participants received complete documentation of all the seminars in a bound copy of the Course Notes.

One session consisted of presentations by three participants of their own software already in use – a rewarding experience for us all. And in the closing session, the working groups presented dictionary entries they had compiled, initiating discussions of various theoretical and methodological issues.

Full details of the 2003 programme can be viewed at:

<http://www.lexmasterclass.com/navigation.php?sec=lexicom&top=lexicom/2004/programme.html>

The course was led by Sue Atkins, Adam Kilgarriff and Michael Rundell, of the Lexicography MasterClass Ltd. It was hard work but it was great fun, and we all learned a lot.

Brighton proved an ideal setting for spare time activities, from walks along the beach to an evening’s clubbing for those with real stamina.

Lexicom 2004

Next year’s workshop will be held in Brighton, England, from June 6th–11th. Participation is limited to 24 people. The programme and general approach will be substantially the same, with a few enhancements suggested by this year's group. Pre-registration is already taking place on our website: <http://www.lexmasterclass.com>
